FOREWORD

In the 1966 Bear, campus life is portrayed candidly, picturing the college student and his activities honestly and without reservations. Approaching the book impressionistically, we have tried to create an atmosphere typical of Shaw University as the 100-year old institution of higher learning enters its second century . . . always remembering how essential each intimate detail is in the make-up of the whole. Therefore, this Centennial Edition is dedicated to a unique life, that of the college student.

WE HONOR THEE . .

Mr. Cooke has played a vital part in the life of Shaw University. Not only has he served as an able professor of the Romance Languages but also as acting Dean of the College. He is currently Director of Special Services.

Because of his contributions to the field of athletics, Coach Lytle deserves tribute. A game, in any sport, would not be complete without his presence. He is director of athletics and head baseball coach.

Every member of the Shaw family can truthfully say that Mr. Gil-Smythe deserves to be honored. He has brought much enlightenment and entertainment to the University in the area of music.

Many teachers gain the respect of their students, but there are few who, by their accomplishments and their devotion instill a bit of awe in those whom they teach.

We pay homage to these four dedicated persons who represent a total of almost a century and a half of service to Shaw University.

Mrs. Ernestine P. Hamlin has rendered many years of service in the Registrar's Office. Students always depend on her to help them through Registration.

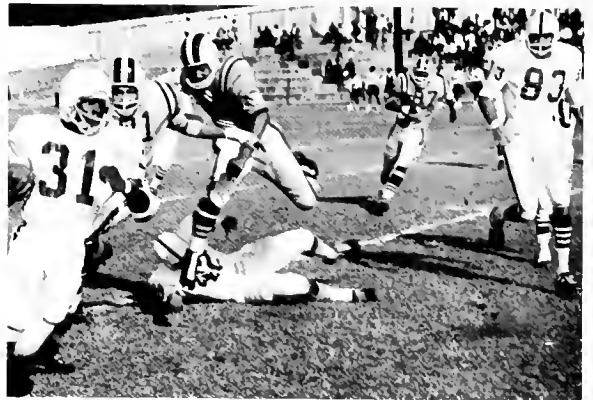

INNOVATION

IMPRESSIONS

College is more than a place; it is a type of existence. It is a life that places great challenges before the student, supplies the means to overcome them, and helps to make him an individual. In individualism there is promise of a stronger united strength.

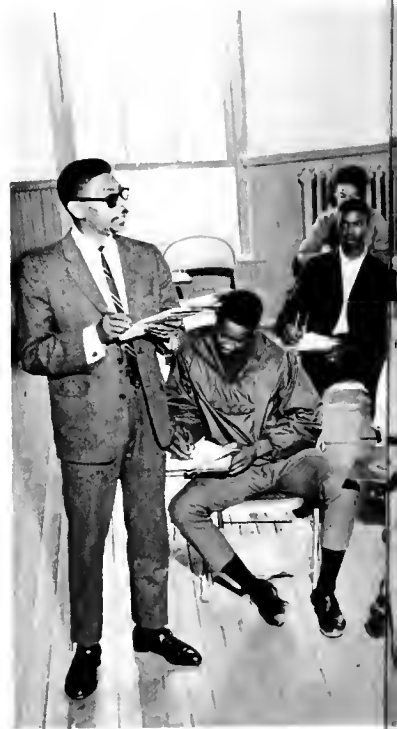

Between these pages you will find many images of what Shaw means to each of its students

Olivia Hardy expounds with words of oration at the coronation as Sir William Smalls awaits his moment.

Staff members Mesdames Louise Lewis and Ernestive P. Hamlin exchange views here with T.V. personality J. D. Lewis at a faculty affair.

Art Bridges recites lines in one of Chestyn Everett's speech class.

Eastern Airlines recruitment representatives interviews senior, Donna Archer.

On the block — Sharon O'Neal.

The faculty "Punch Set" — Mr. and Mrs. David Maves and Clyde Appleton, all members of the Shaw faculty, get service at the annual Freshman reception from Mrs. Imogene Long.

Arthur Kindred listens to words of romance (foreground) from Vera Allen at the May Day festivities.

University of Minnesota visiting students enjoy a moment of relaxation during a visit on the Shaw U. campus.

Shaw students admire the work of the Fitzgibbons' (James & Margaret) in the opening art exhibits in the Fine Arts Festival Exhibitions in Tyler Hall Library.

Alumnus Eric Harding returns to the campus scene for an exchange of "What's happening" with senior Jesse Edmonds.

The crowd gathered for the Centennial Homecoming clash against St. Augustine's College at ancient Chavis Park.

Lady Brenda Bullock and her escort, Sir William Moses, at the Royal Ball, following the annual Caronation.

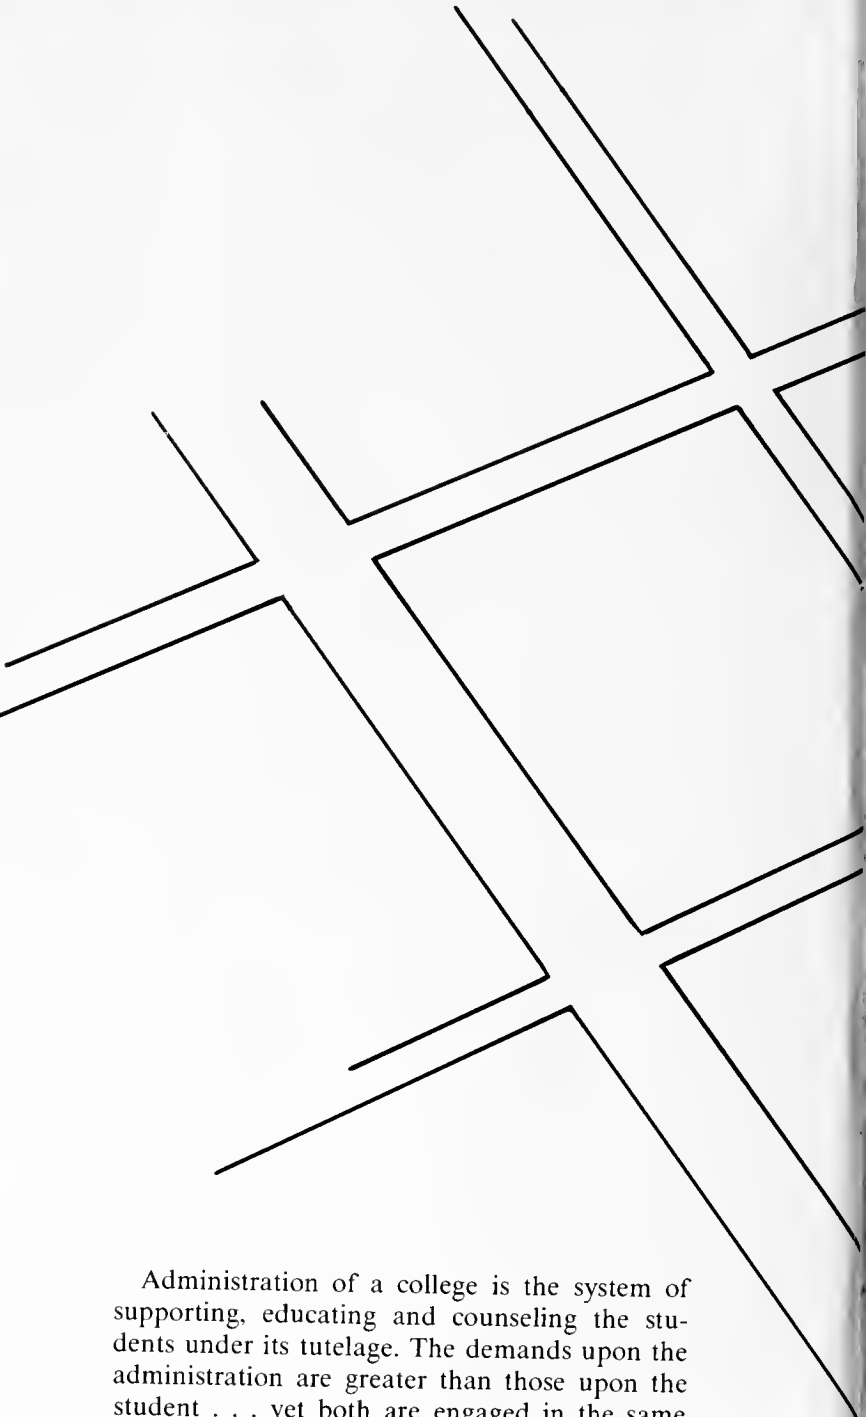

Art Bridges gets "upended" here in the Bears first loss of the '65 football season against Virginia State.

ADMINISTRATION ADMINISTRATION

An abstract graphic design consisting of several thin black lines that intersect to form a series of overlapping rectangular and triangular shapes, creating a complex geometric pattern on the right side of the page.

Administration of a college is the system of supporting, educating and counseling the students under its tutelage. The demands upon the administration are greater than those upon the student . . . yet both are engaged in the same purpose — education. While it is the duty of the student to find and unlock the door to the future, it is the duty of the administration to help that student find the key.

ASA T. SPAULDING: CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES

President of an $85 million firm which is the largest Negro-owned insurance company in the world, director of a leading national chain store, friend and personal emissary for the U.S. presidents and Tar Heel governors — that is the story of Asa T. Spaulding, who began life 62 years ago as a poor farm boy in Columbus County.

Spaulding, now chief executive of North Carolina Mutual Life of Durham, recently received another of his numerous high honors, and one he prizes at or near the top. He became president of the trustees of Shaw University of Raleigh.

Asa Spaulding is particularly proud, because this honor stems from an interest very close to his heart — education.

It was Spaulding's intensely earnest desire for an education that caused him to leave his father's farm deep in the low country of Columbus, and go to Durham. He'd had in his 16 years, only a few years of four-month annual schooling, but this was enough to alert his unusually perceptive mind to the fact that success would be forever elusive without "learning", as education was called. And he meant to be successful.

That he has attained his goals to the fullest and then some, is proof again that "the American dream" need not be only a dream. He surely is in the forefront of those who have made it a reality.

Asa T Spaulding,
Chairman, Board of Trustees

President James E. Cheek — the name and the man are both symbols of dynamic to Shaw University as it embarks on a bold new program and its second century of service to the education of American youth.

Those who know him personally can attest to the fact that here is a man dedicated to the task of developing and enriching the future of Shaw University. Under his administration, the Board of Trustees adopted the University's new educational program and has endorsed a five million dollar Centennial Development Fund Campaign to rebuild the college's entire physical plant.

Dr. King V. Cheek, acting Dean of the College, with his secretary, Mrs. Mildred H. Hooker. A familiar figure around the Shaw campus, Dr. Cheek received his A.B. from Bates College, and his M.A. and J.D. degrees from the University of Chicago.

Academic and Administrative Problems Are Their Domain

Mrs. Roberta F. Lightner is the Administrative Assistant to the President. A product of North Carolina College at Durham, Mrs. Lightner has served under three different administrations at Shaw.

Lenoir H. Cook now serves the University as Director of Special Services, a newly created post in the administrative structure since September, 1965. A graduate of Dartmouth College and Columbia University, Dean Cook as he is called, formerly held the post of acting Dean of the College.

Financial Business and Student Accounts

Financial matters are handled by the University's Business Manager, J. Vernon Parham, here with his secretary, Mrs. M. Annette Lewis.

Mrs. Elizabeth Jiles, accountant, and Joe Lanier Gibbs, bookkeeper, keep tabs on the University's expenditures.

Testing and Student Affairs

Mrs. Velma C. Clarke joined the Shaw Administrative staff this year as Director of Testing, a key post in the University's new academic program, the "Shaw Plan of Education. She is a graduate of Fisk University, where she received both the bachelor's and master's degrees.

Dean of Students, Thomas E. Kee, discusses a financial assistance application with his secretary, Miss Lillie Mae Dunn. A Shaw alumnus, Kee was formerly an instructor in foreign languages. As an undergrad, he was one of Shaw's most outstanding athletes. He earned the M.A. degree at Columbia University.

Public Relations and Development

Another Shaw alumnus, Clifford C. Coles, holds the post of Director of Development and Public Relations. Here he and his secretary, Mrs. Louise W. Lewis, go over the files of some 4,000 graduates. Coles received the M.S.W. degree from Columbia University.

Publicity and Publications are their Province

The University's "news arm" is John Holley, director of the Shaw News Bureau and adviser to student publications. He received his training at North Carolina College at Durham and the State University of Iowa.

Admissions and Records

Mrs. Martha Wheeler, a former Mathematics instructor, is the University's Registrar, who handles admissions and registration. Here she confers with her secretary, Mrs. Gloria Cumbo.

These People Render a Vital Service to the College

Mrs. Laura Kaye is the lady who connects Shaw with the rest of the world.

A newcomer to the Shaw family, Mrs. Imogene Long, serves as Secretary to the President.

The Secretarial Pool headed by Mrs. Nannie Inborden is responsible for the major part of the mimeographed material used here at Shaw. Assisting her are Miss Rena Blyther, Miss LaVerne Hicks and Miss Ruby Fredericks.

Mrs. Elhora Kee is the manager of the bookstore. In this scene she helps students, Veronica Dixon and Joyce Cooke make purchases. Her assistant Doris Henry helps Amur Patterson select books for her classes.

The Associate Dean of Students, Mrs. Elizabeth Cofield, is a friend to all Shaw students. Pat Dowell, a freshman, enlists her aid in getting adjusted to college life.

WHO'S WHO in AMERICAN COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

Members of Who's Who Among Student's in American Colleges and Universities are selected on the basis of scholarship, leadership, participation in extra-curricular activities, and promise of future success. Fourteen Shaw students, eight seniors and six juniors, were chosen, the number being determined by the enrollment at Shaw University.

-LEBRITIES

Although each person has distinguished qualities of personality, it is only occasionally that one encounters a possessor of that extra spark of character. If that character is to be successful, however, it must be founded on sincerity; for sincerity is the infallible yardstick of the public. A Shaw-lebrity, then, must be composed of three factors — that which he sincerely is, that which he sincerely wants to be, and that which he is to others.

Robbie Debnam and Danial Burrell discuss "business" during their leisure time.

Collie Coleman and Sandra Williams find that Shaw is a historical institution.

Majestic looking George Spaulding's entrance signified the opening of the annual Coronation ceremonies this year. A royal affair under the direction of Chestyn Everett, the Coronation had a lasting impression on all who witnessed it.

FACULTY

If our faculty pretended they knew all the answers, they would become bores and pedants. However, when they admit they only know some of the answers, and that students must also engage in the search for truth, they become scholars and friends.

If teachers gave all the answers, many needed and enjoyable hours in the library or science laboratory would not become a part of our college experience. For the search for truth sometimes centers in a lab where many hours of work may contribute only one minute piece of information. Sometimes it is in the library where books must be studied for new insights. But whatever the source, and whatever the knowledge, it passes from teacher to student and from this generation to the next. . . .

Our Faculty Is Not Divine

An attempt to praise the Faculty as a group is possible but also quite unrealistic. To praise them as individuals is impossible for us (the members of the yearbook staff, which is limited lot), but it is the only valid way.

If each reader would praise or commend the instructors and administrators they know, our task here in presenting them to you is complete.

The three necessary elements for a complete education are the learning of facts, self-knowledge and the practical application of both of these to real life. It involves discovery, amplification and improvement of potentialities. It calls for forbearance and the acceptance of the sciences of life.

Above all, it demands that the student think, for only then can an education have perspective.

ОРГАНИЗ

The true scholar is one who accomplished more than his assigned work. He seeks to go beyond . . . to extra-curricular activities. Organizations offer this opportunity.

In participating in activities, the student learns to broaden his outlook and respect the rights of others; to form, arrange, and state his own opinions; and more important, to work cooperatively with his fellow students. He places himself on a scale with others and attempts to improve himself. If he succeeds, the advantages are doubled — he advances the cause of the organization, and places confidence in his own ability.

GREEKS

Greek organizations are societies designed for the social and scholastic benefit of its members, and is founded upon the bond of brotherhood.

The evolvement of fraternities and sororities has been gradual. In early stages, Greeks formed their alliances secretly, since the schools banned any such group. Today, most colleges endorse the organizations, and the fraternities, in return, have given allegiance to the schools. The Greek organizations have become part of the backbone of school spirit.

$10 Million Rebuilding Project Set at Shaw

Campus to Expand to Meet

By SIDNEY STAPLETON
Times Staff Writer

President James E. Cheek of Shaw University has announced the school will institute an entirely new curriculum in September more in line with the needs of the students it admits.

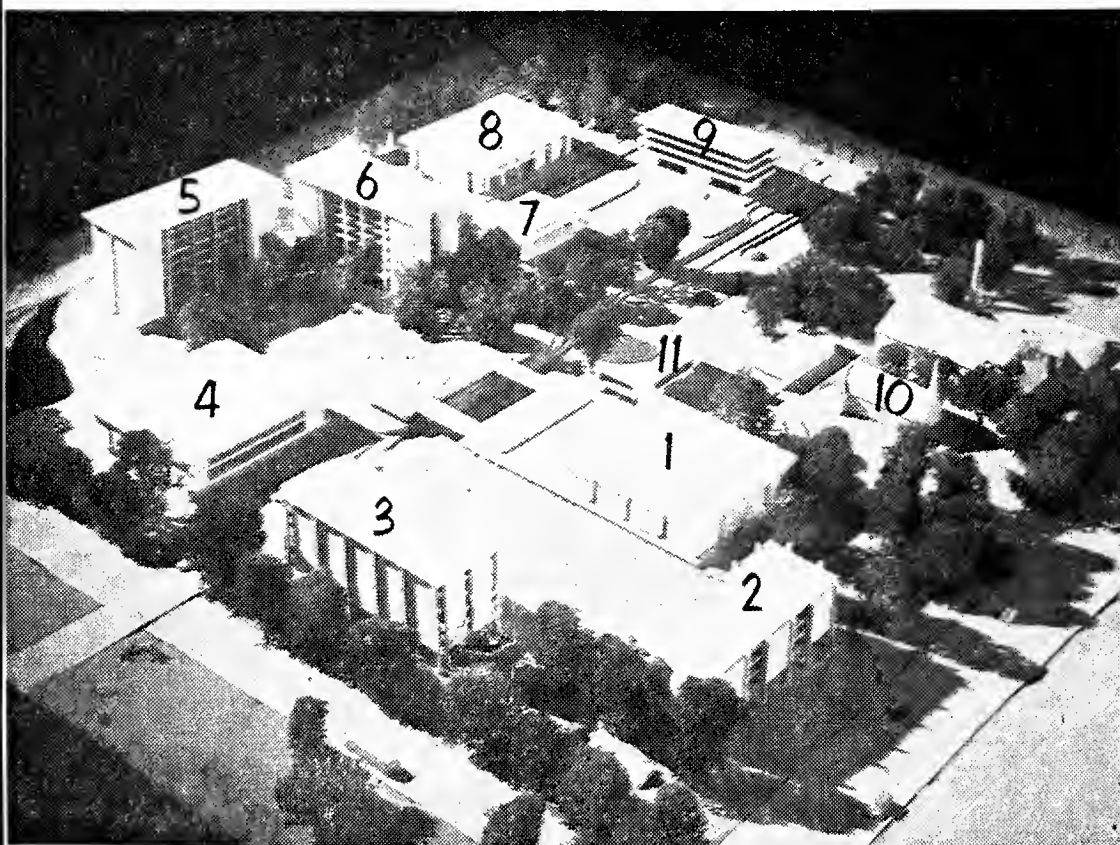

Cheek said the new curriculum is the result of more than two years of study by the administration and faculty at the Shaw in an attempt to enable the school to offer its students the best possible education.

"We have such a wide diversity of ability among the students we admit," Cheek said, "that we must correspondingly diversify our teaching to enable the faster student to go ahead with his education while giving the slower student the additional time and instruction he needs."

Under the new program, some students may need as much as five years to complete their degree requirements while others may secure their degrees in the normal four years, or in some cases, even less.

Shaw will also shift from its present semester system to a "term system" under which it will operate on a full-time basis the year-round. The school year will be divided into four quarters and the student who needs to do more work can attend in the summer.

The future new campus at Shaw University will include (1) library, (2) and (3) classrooms buildings, (4) student lounge and cafeteria, (5) and (6) new residence halls, (7) fine arts building, (8) auditorium and chapel, (9) music building, (10) university church, and (11) the administration building now under construction. Other buildings are existing structures which will be remodeled.

Varied Needs

Under the plan, there will no longer be the accustomed freshman, sophomore, junior and senior designations for students. They will be divided into upper and lower levels with periodic examinations determining when the student should be moved up.

Cheek said extensive tests administered when the student enters will determine which program he will enter.

While the administration drew upon recommendations from other educational institutions for its new program, it is basically their own idea and a somewhat revolutionary concept.

The curriculum will also include the use of automated teaching machines and the addition of an audio-language laboratory.

The 32-year-old Cheek has already broken a number of precedents at the Baptist institution since he was made its president in December of 1963.

At the time Cheek took over, the school was faced with a $280,000 deficit and seemed on the verge of closing. However, Cheek put on a high-powered fund-raising drive among the alumni and friends of the institution and the debt was paid in full in six months.

Cheek also completely revamped the school's administration and faculty, hiring four new department heads, tightening up the lines of responsibility and authority and employing some 15 new teachers. He said an additional six professors will be added this year.

Recently the school sold part of its West campus to the city for street development and used the proceeds from the sale to begin construction on a new $130,000 administration building which is about half complete.

The new building will ultimately stand in the center of a new $10 million campus which Cheek hopes to see rise on the site in the next five to seven years.

Most of the existing buildings will be demolished in phases to make way for the new structures. Only the present natural sciences building, the chapel, the freshman dormitory, and the gymnasium will be left.

Cheek said the campus will be divided into four segments with each area devoted to a specific function. There will be areas for residence halls, teaching, fine arts, and a multi-purpose area centered around the existing chapel building.

First on the list to be constructed is a nine-story women's dormitory with a cafeteria and student lounge to follow. Construction on this building is slated to begin before the end of this calendar year with the cafeteria and lounge following early in 1966.

A new men's dormitory will be added as enrollment necessitates.

In time a six-story natural sciences building and library will be constructed and the present natural sciences building will be remodeled and enlarged for new liberal arts classroom space.

The third phase of the building program will include a fine arts center, a building for music and drama, and a combination chapel and auditorium.

President James E. Cheek of Shaw University emphasizes the need for teaching a diversified curriculum to correspond with the wide variety of ability among the students admitted.

Later the school hopes to acquire a three block tract to the east to develop new recreational areas. Present recreational facilities will be absorbed by the new buildings.

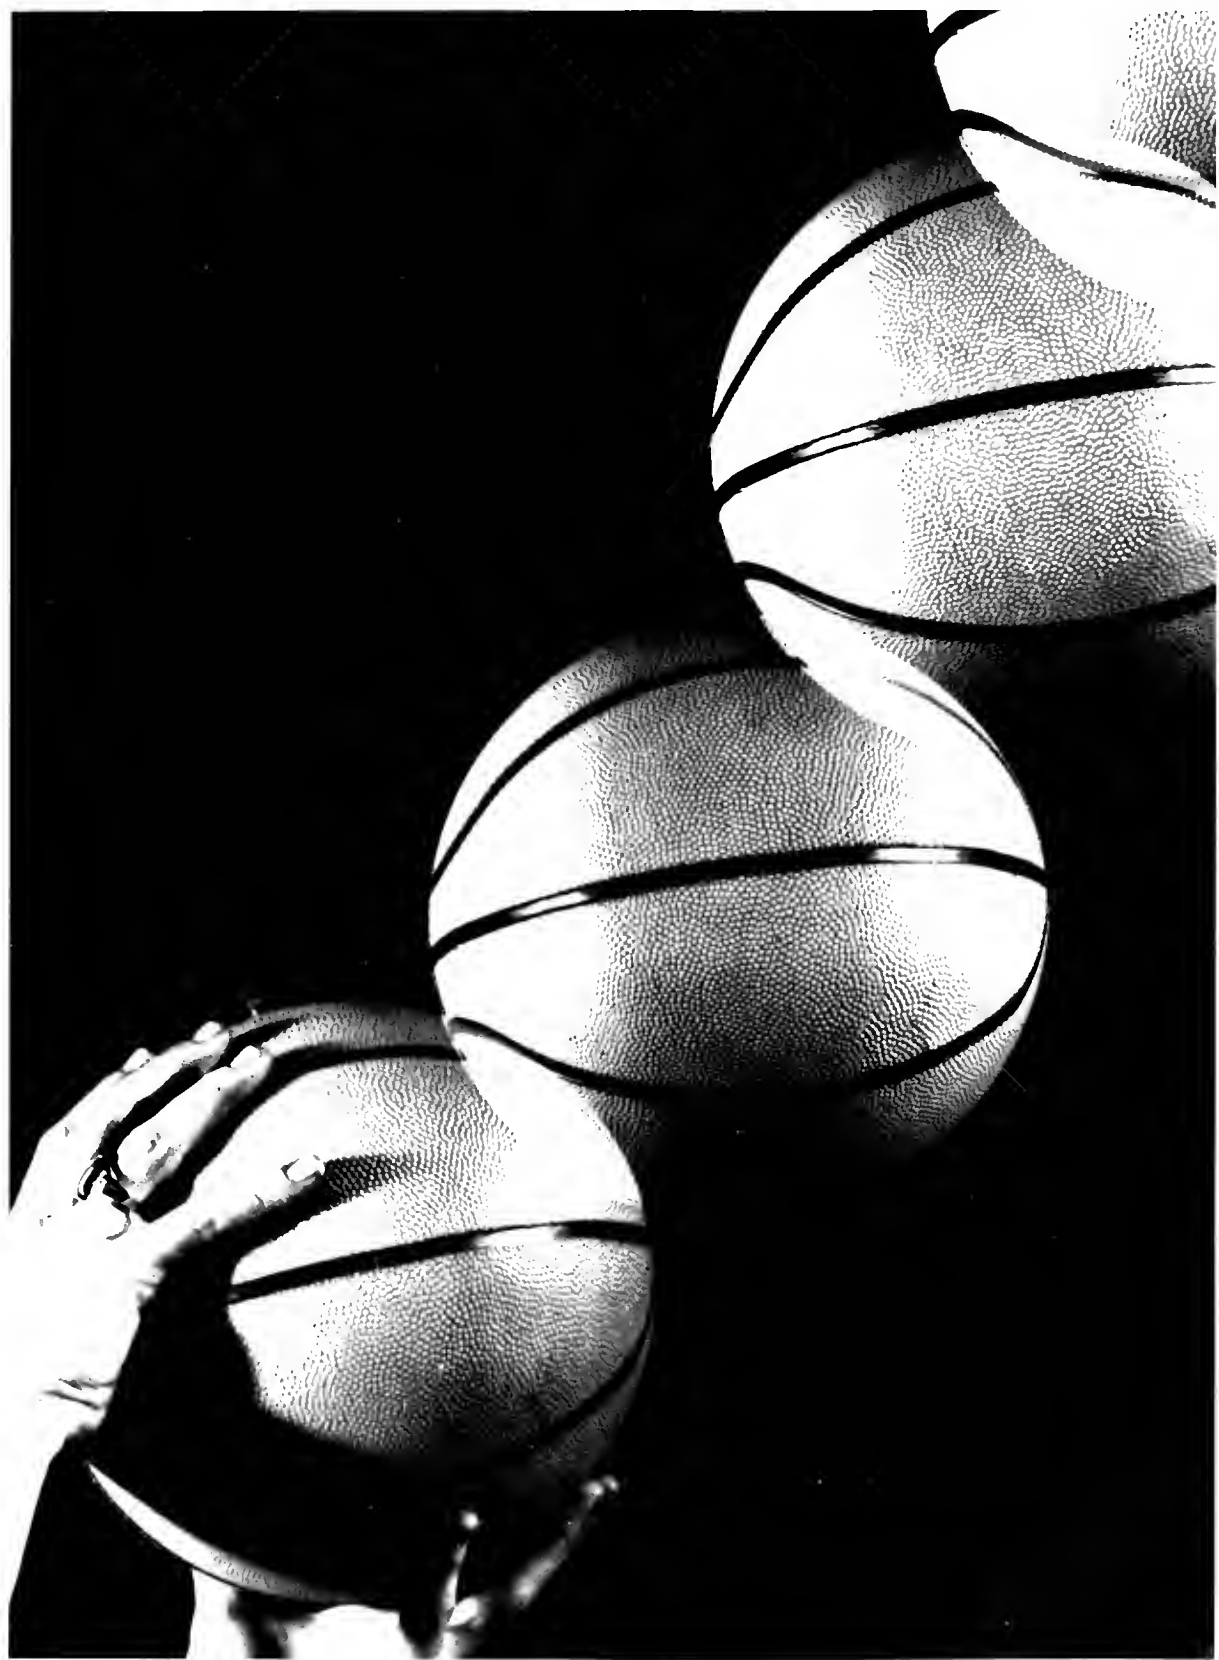

The Baptist school was founded in 1865 and recently celebrated its centennial anniversary. It is thus the oldest Negro co-educational institution in the nation and has about 900 students enrolled.

Cheek himself is a native of Greensboro and Roanoke Rapids, Va. He spent seven years in theological seminaries and one year as a teacher at a Negro college in Richmond, Va., before coming to Shaw.

ATHLETICS

ATHLETICS

Sports and athletics involve a formula combining perseverance, thought and skill. In an athletic contest, the players should have more than the ability to compete well. It is imperative that they learn the arts of teamwork and sportsmanship. They have to accept discouraging defeats on the same plane as exhilarating victories, and be able to temper their emotions to both.

"In our hearts we build a shrine for thee . . .

We hail the Queens of Shaw U. . . ."

Grace, charm, talent, personality and beauty are the qualifications of a successful queen as well as a successful human being. Here at SHAW UNIVERSITY, we are blessed with a bevy of lovely young ladies with the foregoing qualities for being our queens. In looking around our campus, we often wonder, as we view the many lovely lassies who were by-passed because of campus traditions, why there could not be at least "a dozen Queens" for each organization.

This section is devoted entirely to our reigning and charming queens. We will also remember their serenity during the Coronation, homecoming festivities, the Greek balls and many other festive affairs of their domain here at dear ole SHAW U.

College is more than a place; it is a type of existence. It is a life that places great challenges before a student, supplies the means to overcome them, and helps to make him an individual. In individualism there is promise of a stronger, united strength.

College life is constructed on four cornerstones — scholarship, social life, self-knowledge, and school spirit. If these cornerstones are to support the college, they must be placed upon a firm foundation — quality of the individual student.

SHAW UNIVERSITY

Its History and Rebirth

In 1965, Shaw University completed a full century of educational activity premised upon the principle that religion and learning go hand in hand and that character grows with understanding. (knowledge)

The story of these one hundred years is studded with turbulence, wars, depressions and with radical changes in educational policy and practice. In a larger sense, it is also the story of that curious American phenomenon called Negro education, now considered anachronistic by informed observers.

No brief account can ever hope to capture completely the sense of drama nor reveal truly the skeins of continuity connecting that long ago beginning, with the college as it exists today. But perhaps something of the pathos may be conveyed with the statement that upon witness of the disorder prevalent here a scant three years ago, even the most impartial observer would not have failed to predict utter collapse for this embattled college. But this prediction could not have been more wrong, for it would have reckoned the tireless efforts of dedicated men and women to keep alive a worthy enterprise.

Now Shaw enters her second century of service. The future could not be more bright, the opportunities more numerous, nor the achievement of true excellence nearer her grasp. For the predominantly Negro, private liberal arts church-related college, Shaw University now points the way to the future.

It began on October 10, 1865. A white New Englander, Henry Martin Tupper, recently discharged Union Army Chaplain, arrived in Raleigh at the behest of the American Baptist Home Mission Society to help feed, clothe and educate the newly freed slaves. The first two mandates were relatively easily accomplished. But it would be difficult to imagine a more inauspicious time for the founding of a college.

It was the closing weeks of the great fratricidal, Civil War. Busy licking its own wounds, the impoverished ante bellum South had neither the resources nor the inclination to educate its former bondsmen. Into this vacuum stepped the Northern based American Baptist Home Mission Society and other church related agencies, giving impetus to the establishment of many church related colleges across the southland. This was a development in which Shaw shared; but, there, the similarity ends.

On that first day, Tupper was advised to "Catch the first train going back North" by a fellow clergyman. But Tupper was not to be put off. From his diary note on December 1, 1865, a month hence, the entry that he had visited six families, held a prayer meeting and "heard my theological class", the college takes its date of origin. Only July 5, 1866, the Raleigh Institute was formed, enrolling seventy-five students for training as ministers and teachers. In 1870, the name was changed to Shaw Collegiate Institute, and construction begun on Shaw Hall, named for the largest contributor, Hlijah Shaw. With the issuance of a charter in 1875, the name became Shaw University, and in 1878, six students were graduated three with the Bachelor of Arts degree and three with the Bachelor of Science degree.

From the outset, the fledgling school was in direct conflict with contemporary educational thought which held that Negroes were incapable of significant educational achievement. Disdainful of such thinking, Shaw offered high school level courses in carpentry, furniture-making and bricklaying in addition to college level degree programs in Theology, Law and Pharmacy. In 1881, Shaw instituted a four year medical training program, which was the first in this country and which remains the pattern of medical education even today.

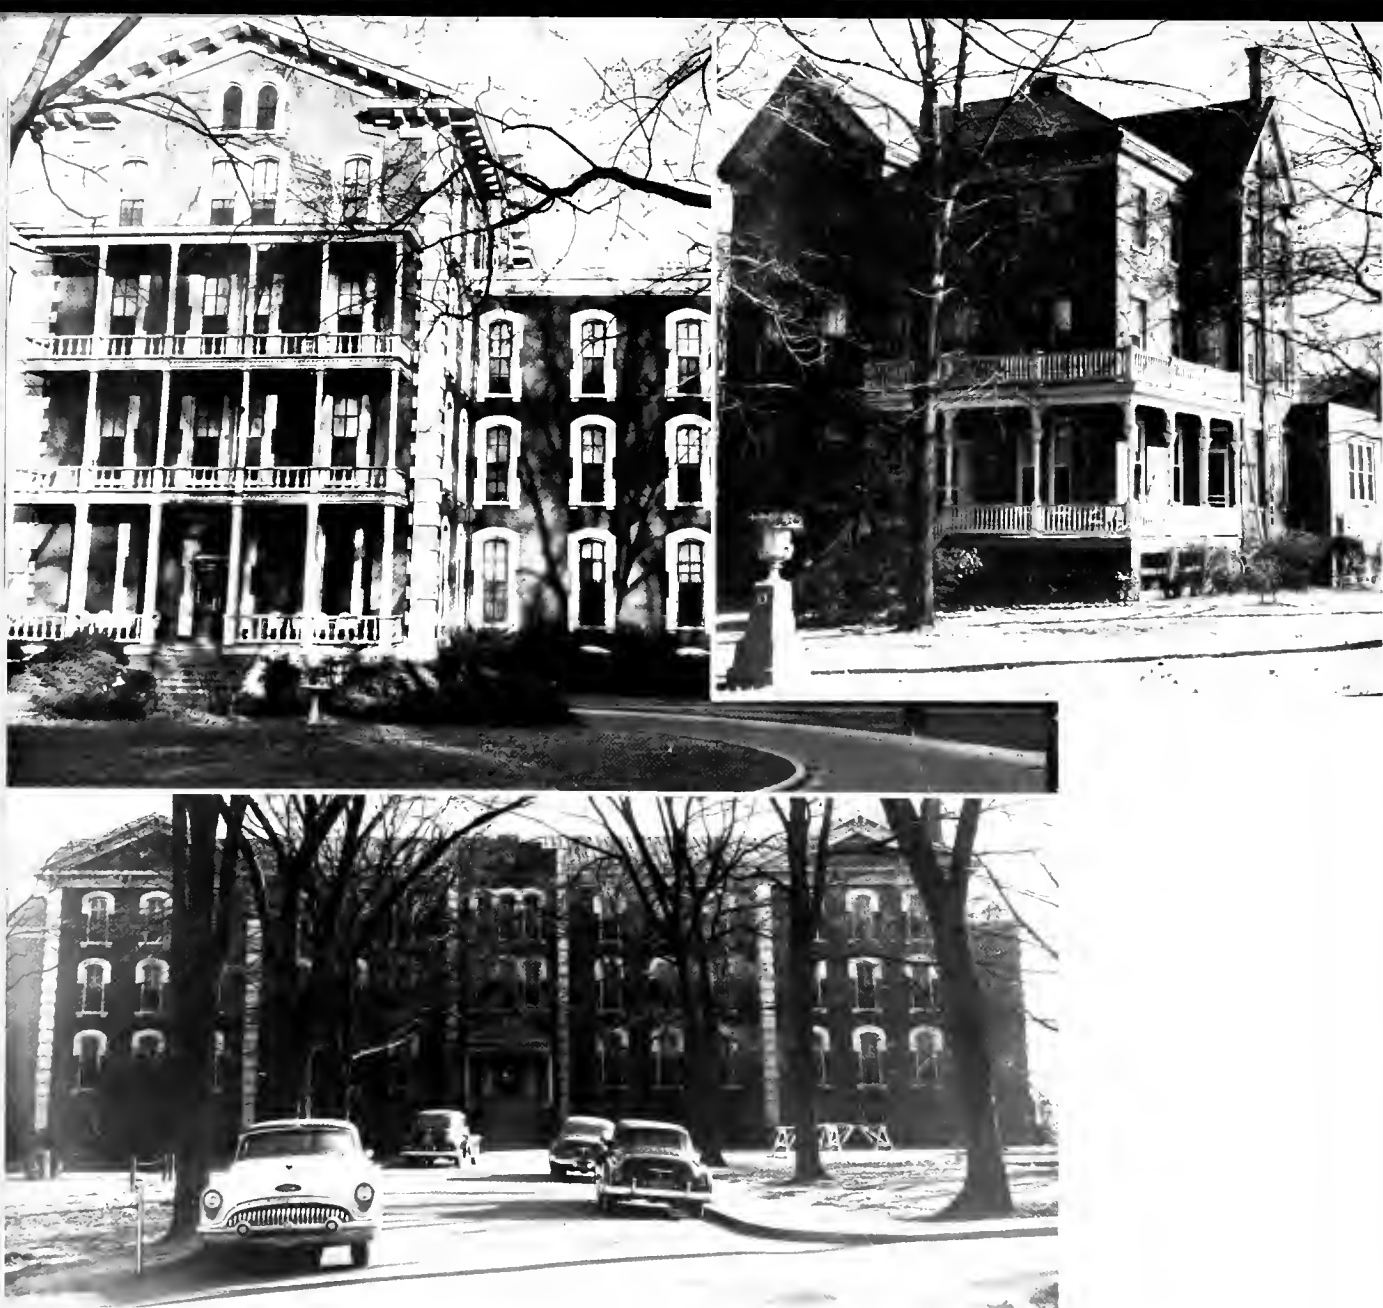

Ignoring the current vogue of considering women suitable only for housework, another educational heresy was committed with the establishment in 1872 of a "Female Department". Despite heavy criticism of housing both men and women on the same campus, Tupper persisted in appealing for funds with which to build a women's residence. In 1874 a women's residence was erected bearing the name of its largest contributor, Jacob Estey. So successful was the Women's Department, that in 1893, a Missionary Training Department was added for women also.

Tupper succeeded in surrounding himself with capable and distinguished assistants. Evenly divided between white and Negro teachers, the Shaw faculty were dedicated, missionary spirited men and women whose academic preparation was good but whose salaries enabled them only to live in a shabby state of respectability. In the early decades, teachers like McKee, Hayward, Charlotte Murray, Brawley, Pegues and later, Payne, Cook, Gil-Smythe and others, all gave unstintingly of themselves. They will be long remembered.

Student life was rigorous but not unpleasant. Emphasis was placed on Christian character building. This was supported by daily chapel attendance and evening prayer service plus a two hour course in Bible. There were literary societies, debate groups and various cultural programs, sometimes open to the public. The only relief in this otherwise stringent regiment was organized intercollegiate sports such as baseball and football. Socializing was permitted although dancing was not. Still, any thought of student docility must be dispelled when on January 2,

Charles Francis Meserve . . . expanded vocational offerings and closed the professional schools . . .

1914 they revolted over the suspension of J. D. Bean, a student who had gotten married against regulations. Threatened with dishonorable dismissal if they did not return to class, many decided to leave rather than submit.

Henry Martin Tupper died on November 12, 1893 and was laid to rest on the campus. His headstone reads, "He counted not his life dear unto himself that he might lift Godward his brother." By sheer force of his determination and resolve, he had established a viable institution of learning against the most acute odds. He had provided ample demonstration of the Negro's educability and his desire to lead a useful, productive life. In heartfelt gratitude to him, whenever the University Choir traveled north on tour they stopped in Philadelphia to visit and sing in the nursing home where his widow had gone to live out her years.

pleading rising costs and diminishing finances. A more serious blow to the graduates of these schools (404 physicians, 124 pharmacists and 54 lawyers) would be hard to imagine.

Serving from January 1920-1931, Joseph Leishman Peacock decided not to compete with the burgeoning state secondary school program. He phased out Shaw's high school curriculum, reduced the industrial offerings and concentrated increasingly on upgrading the collegiate level courses.

To the aristocratic William Stuart Nelson, the first Negro president, 1931-1935, fell the awesome task of cultivating new financial support from the Negro community and alumni. His task can best be appreciated when it is recalled that this period coincides with the beginning of the great depression.

Building upon the legacy of his predecessor, the enthusiastic Robert Prentiss Daniel, set in motion a building renovation program. He strengthened the academic program and achieved an "A" rating from the earlier "B" awarded in 1933 by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

William R. Strassner served creditably from 1951-1962. However, the latter part of his administration represents a time of growing discontent and disenchantment. Shaw's rank in academia suffered. Her physical plant had fallen cation and influence. The result was often contrasting changes in educational policies and practices. A brief view of each incumbent's administration is instructive.

Charles Francis Meserve was a warm admirer of Booker T. Washington. As the president from 1894-1919, Meserve expanded the vocational offerings and in 1914 closed the professional schools, Law and Medicine, into pitiable condition. She was encumbered with heavy indebtedness. Closure was imminent. The situation seemed beyond reclamation. Strassner resigned in 1962.

From August 1962 to November 1963, interim president Nelson H. Harris presided. A stalwart of some thirty years' service and, some say, a by-passed candidate for president in 1951, Harris ushered Shaw into the closing years of her first century.

In December of 1963 the Board of Trustees passed the presidential reins to James E. Cheek, age 31, dynamic, hard-driving and the first alumnus to be so honored. Comparable to Tupper in vision and force of personality, Cheek's administration has been characterized by a bold, innovative educational and physical redevelopment program. So impressive have been his accomplishments, that Shaw's future as a modern urban center of learning and culture is virtually assured for generations to come.

THE CENTENNIAL FESTIVAL OF THE ARTS

As a major feature of the celebration of its one hundredth anniversary, Shaw University presented the Centennial Festival of the Arts, the first such promotion of its kind in the school's history. The Festival featured artists of distinction from the worlds of music, drama, literature and art.

Through this Festival, the University brought to new recognition the concept that valid artistic experiences are central to the enhancement of the human condition — without them, life would become narrow and meaningless.

The festival provided significant cultural exposure not only for the college community, but for the community at large.

THE CENTENNIAL
STUDENT SYMPOSIUM

THE INAUGURAL – CENTENNIAL CONVOCATION

On Saturday afternoon, April 16, Dr. James Edward Cheek was inaugurated as seventh president of Shaw University. Nearly 1,500 gathered in Raleigh Memorial Auditorium as the academic processional of some 400 representatives of colleges and universities, learned societies and organizations, and representatives from businesses, government, civic, and religious organizations, donned in academic regalia, filed into the auditorium.

Williams' Academic Procession, played by North Carolina College's band, set a mood of ceremony and majesty. Three honorary degrees were confirmed and the University's Charter and Seal were transferred to Dr. Cheek by Dr. Asa T. Spaulding, Chairman of the Board of Trustees. The Centennial-Inaugural address was delivered by Dr. Earl J. McGrath, executive officer of the Institute of Higher Education, Teachers College, Columbia University, and the Inaugural response was delivered by President Cheek.
